Precious Hubby: — just called for your wonderful letter of Tuesday. Honey, I am as happy as can be about that case. Let me know honey, how it is getting on, will you, dear? Has much do you think you will make out of it? Oh, honey, if only you got a few more like that, — we would certainly be millionaires, wouldn't we, precious? It will all come, honey, see if it does. Think of it, without any recommendation or anything. Just saw the sign and came up. You sure are doing wonderfully well, precious, and I am proud of my hubby. I now hope L. Taylor sees fit to turn you over that proposition. Hard to wait until April first, I suppose, before we know anything definite about it. And by that time you may become notary republic, too. Well, honey, April seems to be a big month, and I have do exist it were here. That would mean, too, being only a month longer and what? ———

I hardly think Bill found the check. It seems strange that they never traced that check, doesn't it, precious! It certainly around come in mighty handy. I'll see about it later, see how things come on financially. Somehow, I can not bring myself to cash it. I feel very guilty.

Hank, dear, who is it that you think will back the black ball? Is it still Mr. Matsby that you suspect? If you are black balled, you can apply again, can't you or does that count against you? I should certainly like to see you get in for I feel it would mean more business. Let me know what you intend doing.

I wrote to uncle yesterday after I had written your letter. I found a little spare time for soon he came very busy. Explain to uncle that the reason his letter was so very short was because I was rather busy at the time. Next time I shall try to do better. Will try to drop the ble. a few words soon, too. How are things going along now, between you two? I hope that even disagreement there was has blown over.

I will run up to see Mom to-morrow, Friday. I have some shopping to do. Have to get Fay's wedding gift, and several things that I need for myself. How can I hardly go out instead of spending on the Saturdays that I am off? You know that is the only time in which I can do it. Once I get down, South, back, I shall be able to take things easier & rest, but precious until I get there I have so much work before me, that I never can think about it. I'll be alright, don't worry, love, and shall make up for it when I reach Memphis. You will make me happy, & I shall be happy to be with you, so love it shall be worth all that effort in the end. What do you say, precious.

Well, honey, love, I shall have to close, not before however, I tell you that I still love you passionately as ever and long for you, too, just as much. How about your precious? I do wish I could look forward to next week and say, "I shall start then." Never mind, precious, Feb. is nearly over, and so that sounds encouraging, don't it?

As ever,

Your loving wife.
